

THE EXPERT PLASTERER

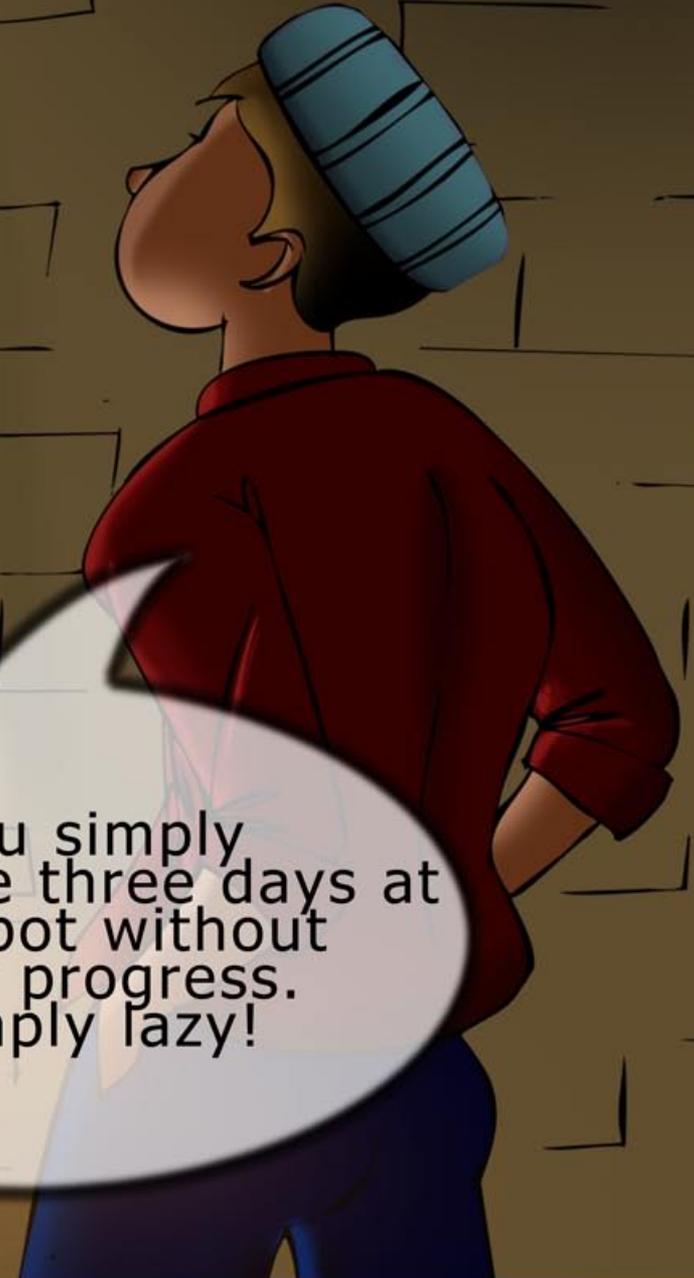

This is a story about an expert plasterer who worked on the construction of Taj Mahal.

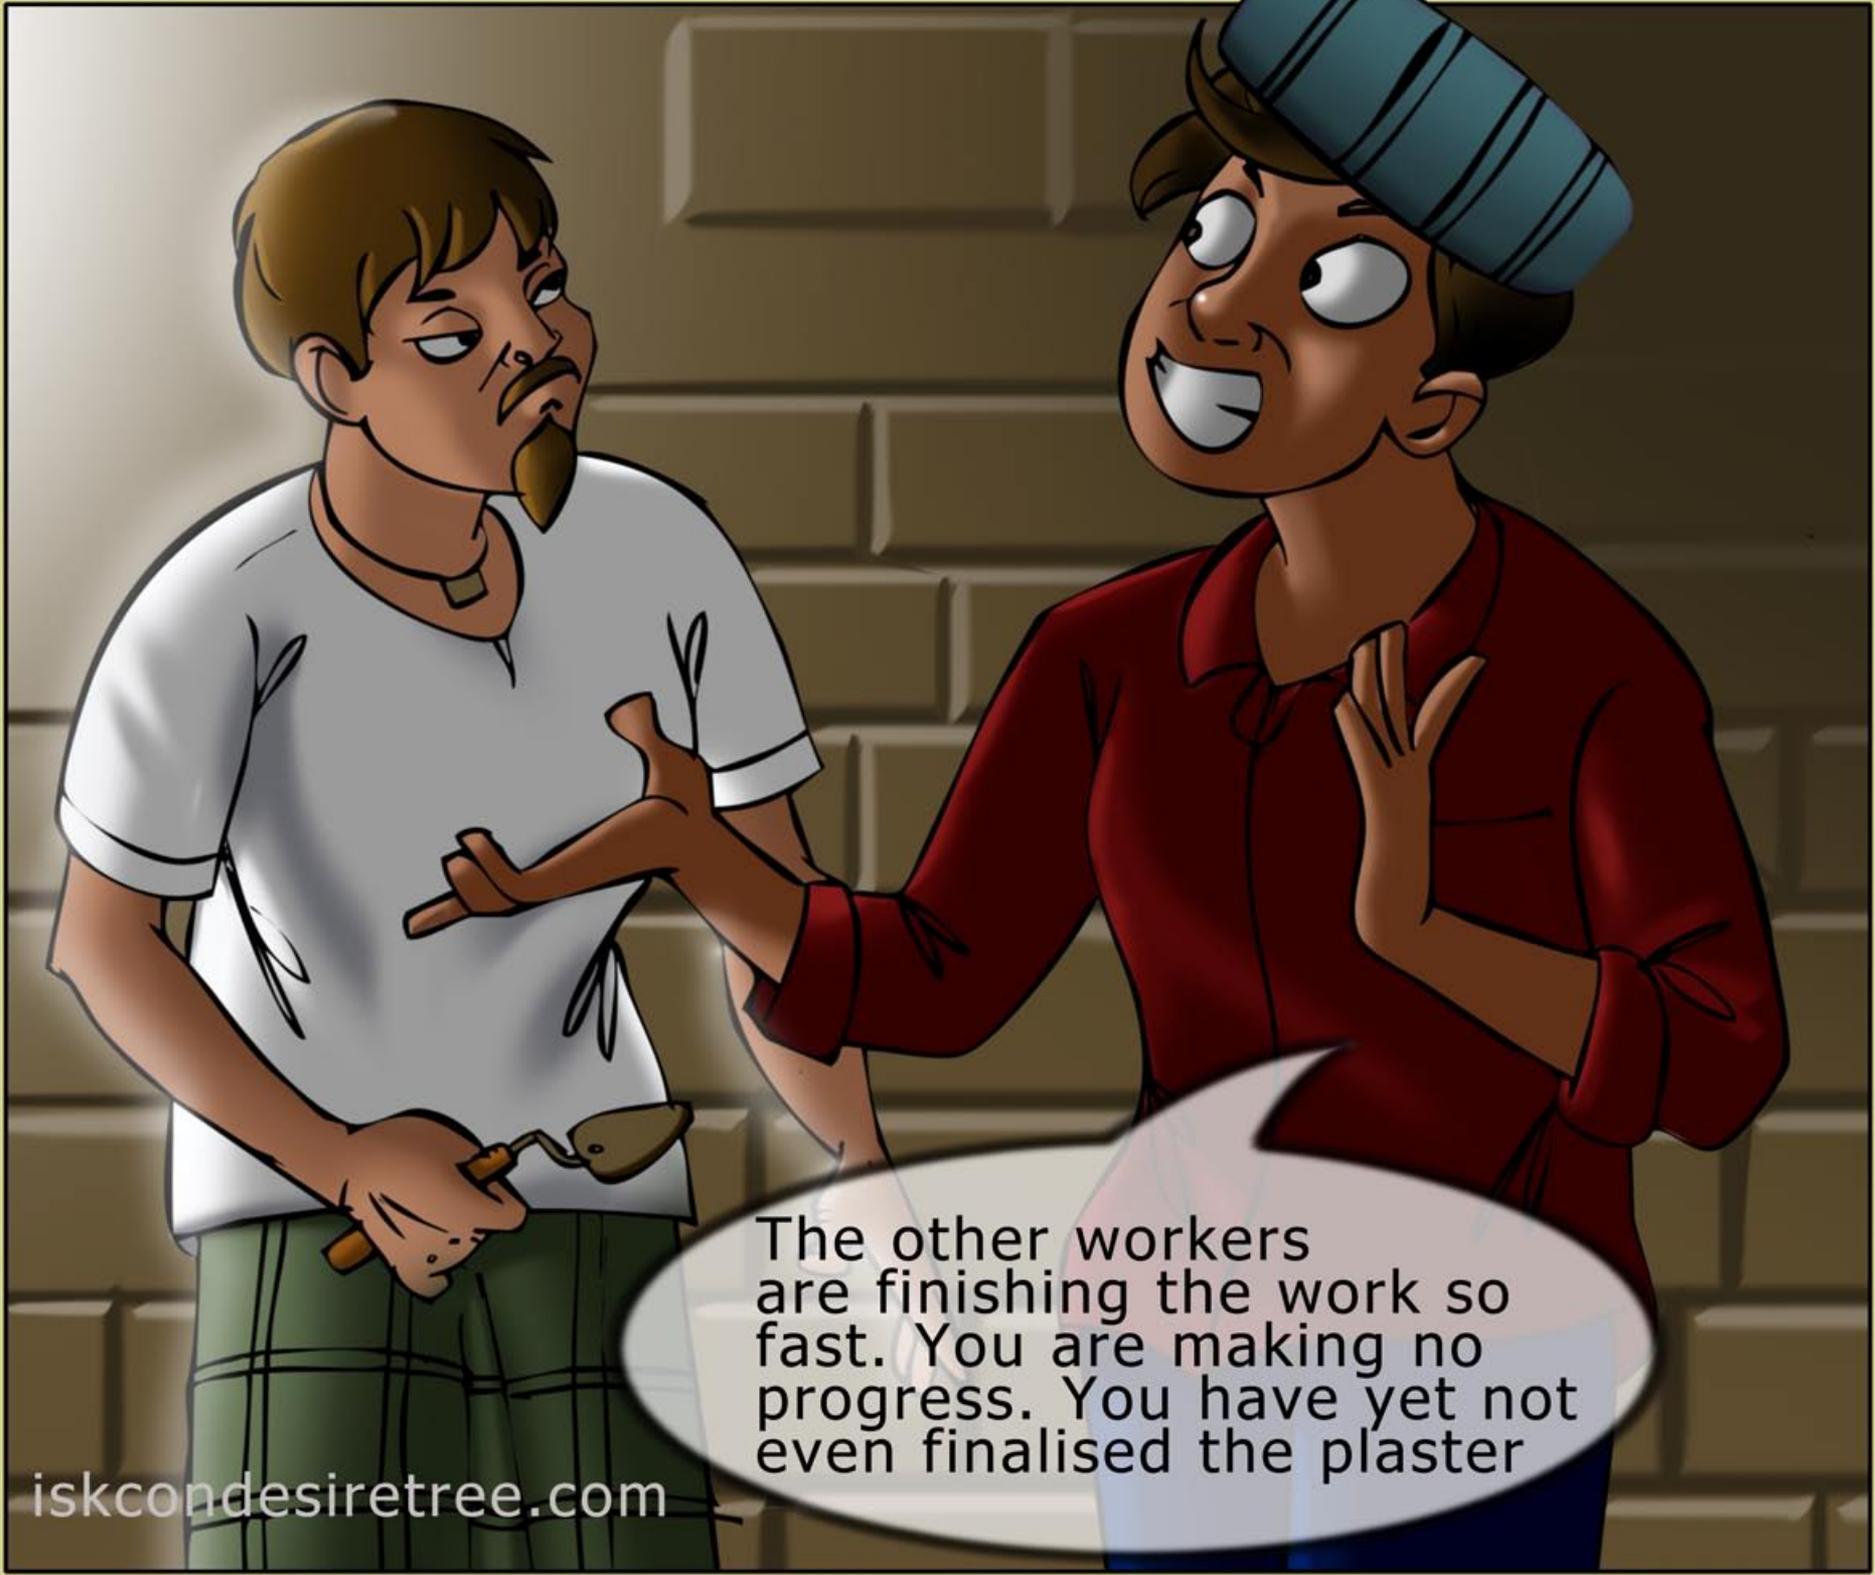

Once, the chief of construction was inspecting the site progress. For three days in a row, he noticed a particular plasterer sitting at the same spot and mixing and testing the plaster

On the third day the inspector became angry and said.....

Why are you simply sitting since three days at the same spot without making any progress. You are simply lazy!

The other workers are finishing the work so fast. You are making no progress. You have yet not even finalised the plaster

The man who was mixing the plaster also became very angry.

He threw a handful of his plaster at the inspector.

The plaster missed the inspector but landed on a wall. The plaster was so well mixed, however, so solid and hard, that no one could get it off the wall, and it is still there today.
