

THE YOGI'S WAGER

A servant of a very rich man came before his master one day and told him of an interesting yogi he had seen in the river

This yogi claimed he could stay in the water all night in the middle of the river
without any outside heat

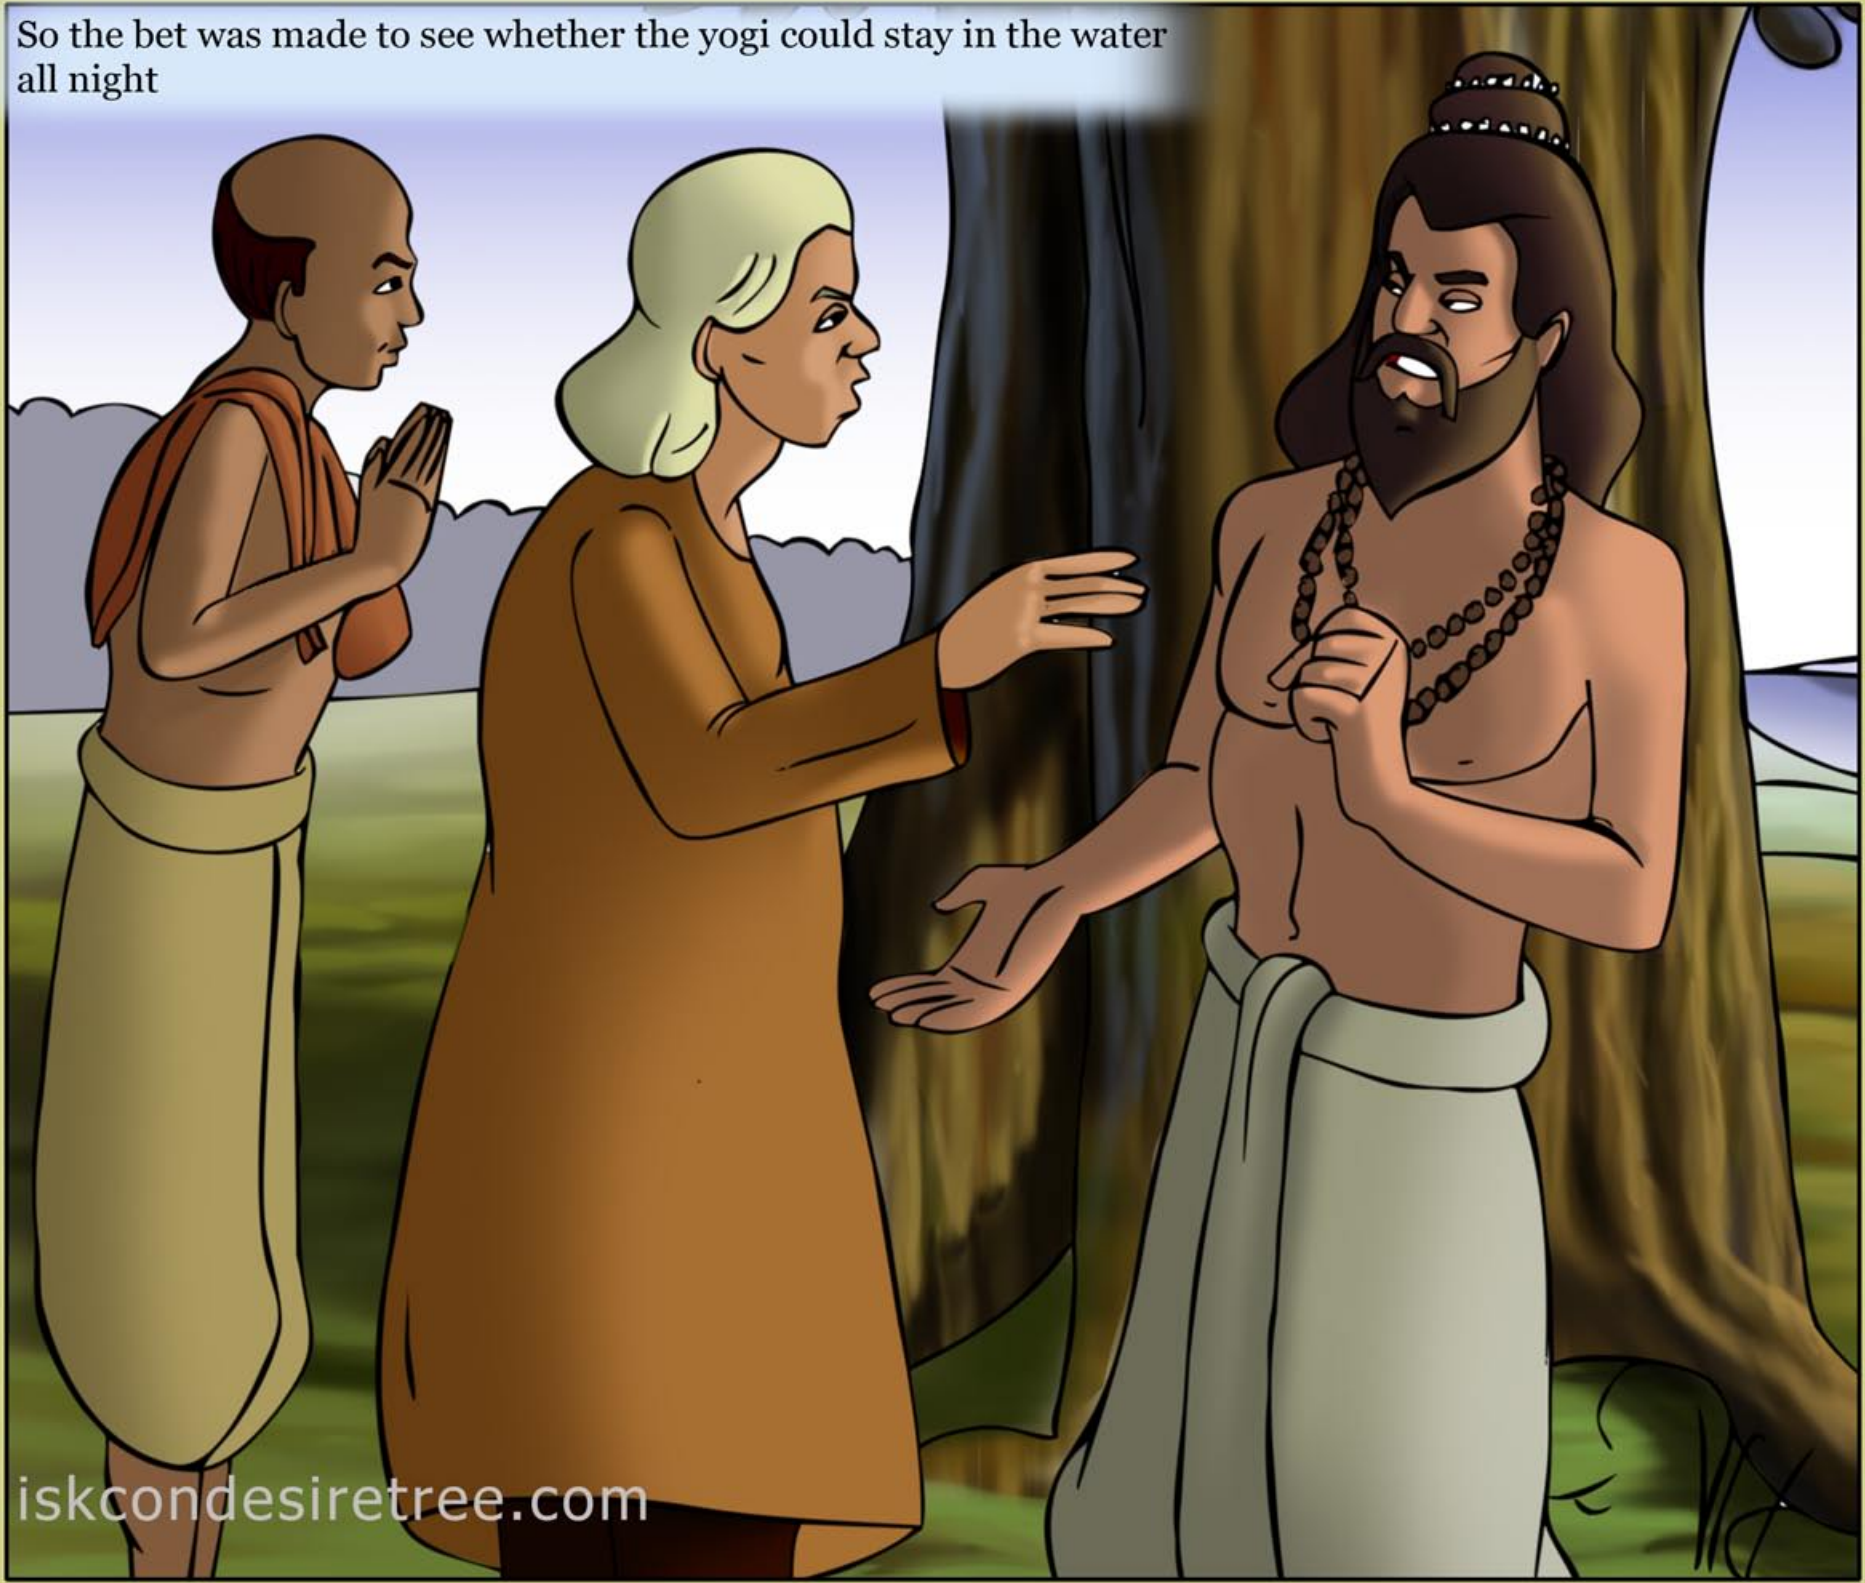

The yogi was willing to take a wager with anyone to prove that he could do that.

When the rich man heard this, he decided to wager against the yogi.

So the bet was made to see whether the yogi could stay in the water all night

The yogi went into the water, and the rich man and his servant went home

The next day word came that the yogi had successfully stayed in the water all night.

The rich man went out to see the yogi, and indeed he was still standing in the water.

Therefore the rich man had lost the wager.

But then a friend of the rich man said.....

Wait! See that light?

He pointed to a small flame far away in a temple.

By his mystic power, this yogi has been using the heat of that light to keep warm in the water.

So he shouldn't be paid, because the bet was that he would stay in the water without taking any heat.

Taking advantage of the word jugglery. The rich man said....

Yes I'm not going to pay you.
You've tricked me.

Then the rich man and his servant went back to the house.

Soon the rich man asked his servant....

Cook me a nice breakfast.

But after waiting for some time, the servant had not produced anything. The rich man expressed his impatience.

Is it ready?

Please wait.
I'm cooking.